If your Apple Watch isn't receiving any text messages, it can be a big problem if you're missing important notifications. However, you can quickly fix many issues surrounding receiving text messages. Here's how to fix it when your Apple Watch isn't receiving text messages. There are many different reasons you're not receiving notifications when a text arrives on your Apple Watch. Try these troubleshooting tips to get to the bottom of it. Check if Do Not Disturb or Airplane mode is on. If either is, you won't receive messages or other notifications (by intention). Check your connection. Check that your iPhone and Apple Watch connection is stable and working. If it has dropped, you won't be able to receive messages. Repair your devices. If the connection between Apple Watch and iPhone won't work, try repairing or resyncing your Apple Watch. If your Apple Watch is receiving text messages but not vibrating when the message arrives, you can miss something important. Here's a look at how to fix the vibrate function. Check that your Apple Watch notification settings are set up correctly. If so, you should receive haptic feedback as well as your message. Try rebooting your Apple Watch. Sometimes a minor technical glitch can cause the problem. Check to see if every app doesn't vibrate or just one. If it's just one or two apps, check their settings to reactivate vibration. If you've tried the above fixes and your Apple Watch still won't display text messages, here are some more ideas for fixing the problem. Try sending/receiving a message from your iPhone. If your iPhone doesn't receive messages either, the problem may lie with that rather than your Apple Watch. Check you're signed in. Check on the Apple Watch app that you're signed in to your Apple ID. Also, check you're signed in to the correct account. Update your devices. Update your Apple Watch and iPhone. Sometimes, this can fix temporary issues. Check your notification settings. Check that your Apple Watch and iPhone are set up to share notifications. Check you're wearing your Apple Watch correctly. The Apple Watch only displays notifications when you're wearing it on your wrist. Turn off wrist detection. If you're wearing your Apple Watch but it doesn't detect you are, switch off wrist detection to circumvent the sensor. Switch off Cover to Mute. Like the Apple Watch's Do Not Disturb mode, Cover to Mute silences notifications, including text messages. Switch the setting off by opening the Watch app, going to My Watch > Sounds & Haptics, and toggling Cover to Mute off. Contact Apple Support. If all these fixes have failed to work, your Apple Watch may need to be repaired by Apple. Contact them to arrange the repair. FAQ Why are only some of my texts coming to my Apple Watch? Double-check your iPhone iMessage settings from Settings > Messages. Ensure the toggle next to iMessage is active (green) and that you've signed in to the same Apple ID your Apple Watch is using from Send & Receive. Why is my Apple Watch not showing contact names with texts? Open the Contacts app on your iPhone and check that you have the name field completed for all contacts. If that's a non-issue, restart your watch. The next step to try is a device resync from the Watch app on your iPhone. Go to General > Reset > Reset Sync Data. How am I getting texts on my Apple Watch when my iPhone isn't near? Your Apple Watch can function without your phone, and one way it does that is by connecting to Wi-Fi when your iPhone isn't nearby. If you purchased a cellular-capable model, it can function as a stand-alone device. You can tell from a glance at your watch's Control Center if it's connected to Wi-Fi (indicated by a blue Wi-Fi symbol) or cellular (green cellular icon). Thanks for letting us know! Missing and delayed text messages can be frustrating, especially since you may not be aware of the problem until somebody contacts you using another method to ask why you're not responding or where you are. Luckily, you can address the problem quickly. Text messaging has three components: the devices, the app, and the network. These components have multiple points of failure. The device may not be working correctly, the network may not be sending or receiving messages, or the app may have a bug or other malfunction. In some cases, these causes aren't easy to diagnose. For example, text messages may be delayed because the cellular network is overwhelmed with traffic, sending messages in the order received. It's best to start with the most common problem and work your way down the list since there are many potential points of failure. If you don't receive texts on Android, and you know someone is sending them to you, these troubleshooting steps can help you clear up the issue. Before getting started, it's always a good idea to test your ability to receive texts from a few different people, if possible. That could yield some clues as to what the problem might be. Check for blocked numbers. If you know someone is sending you texts, but you're not receiving those texts, check to see if the number is blocked. Check the network connection. Mobile networks are sometimes unpredictable. If you see a few or no bars, step outside or find a higher place indoors. If you're in your home, you can use a signal booster to improve reception throughout the home. Disable Airplane mode. Check your settings to see if airplane mode is enabled, and once disabled, check your network connection. Airplane mode shuts down every form of wireless communication, not only Wi-Fi. Reboot the phone. Sometimes there are endless loops or other issues behind the scenes that you may be unable to diagnose but are easily solved with a reboot. This also installs any operating system updates the texting app may need. Deregister iMessage. If you formerly used an iPhone, ask anyone who regularly texts with you with an iPhone to either disable iMessage or to send you a new text at your number, instead of contacting you from an old text thread. An iMessage thread doesn't translate over to Android. Update Android. Install any outstanding operating system updates, even if an update doesn't seem relevant to the problem you experience. Some bug fixes and other repairs may address operations or features the texting app uses. Wait for any updates to finish before texting. Update your texting app. Updates often resolve obscure issues or bugs that may prevent your texts from sending. Clear the texting app's cache. Then, reboot the phone and restart the app. Check your cellular provider's website. If nothing else works, look for any alerts or updates concerning network issues. Network problems may not be immediately obvious to end users, or may only affect certain functions. After trying all these steps, if you're still having trouble, it might be time to look for a newer phone. Android models range anywhere from $150 to $2,000; we've tested many phones, so be sure and review our recommendations list before you buy. FAQ Why am I not receiving notifications on Android? If you're not receiving Android notifications, check to see if Do Not Disturb or Airplane Mode are turned on, and turn them off. Make sure system notifications and app notifications are turned on in your settings. Your power or data settings could also be preventing apps from retrieving notification alerts. How can you tell if someone has received your text message or not? Why would my text messages disappear on Android? If your Android text messages disappear, it could be due to changes in your date and time settings, or it could just be a bug. Fortunately, there are ways to recover deleted Android messages. Begin with updating Android and restarting your device. Thanks for letting us know! Get the Latest Tech News Delivered Every Day Subscribe Tell us why! Your iPhone is probably a phone in name only - odds are good that you spend a lot more time texting than talking. But if your Messages app is not working or you are having trouble getting text messages, don't panic. There are several possible problems, and you can troubleshoot your iPhone's messaging problem easily. Check out the products mentioned in this article: iPhone Xs (From $999.99 at Best Buy) What to do when your iPhone isn't receiving messages Your first step should be to restart your iPhone. Often, just turning it off and back on again can solve myriad problems with apps, network connections, and other technical glitches. Check your network connection to make sure that you have connectivity. If you are trying to send a traditional SMS message, you need to have a cellular signal, so make sure you see several bars of strength in the status at the top of the screen. If you want to send an iMessage to another iPhone, you need either a cellular signal or Wi-Fi, so again, make sure you have a solid connection with one of those. Make sure you see several bars for SMS or, if there's poor cellular reception, a solid Wi-Fi signal for iMessages. Dave Johnson/Business Insider If you want to send an MMS message (a text message that contains photos, video, or audio), make sure MMS messaging is turned on. Start Settings and tap "Messages," then make sure "MMS Messaging" is turned on by swiping the button to the right. You might also want to ensure your cellular plan includes MMS, though virtually all do. Ensure MMS is turned on in Settings. Dave Johnson/Business Insider Check to see if you can receive messages after each of these steps. If not, move on to the next section. Make sure that your iPhone is configured to receive text messages. 1. Start the Settings app. 2. Tap "Messages," then tap "Send & Receive." 3. In the "You can receive iMessages" section, your phone number should have a check mark beside it. If it's not checked, do that now and check to see if you can receive messages. Your phone number should be checked in order to receive messages. Dave Johnson/Business Insider If your phone number isn't displayed there at all, you need to link your phone number to your Apple ID. 1. At the top of the screen, tap "Use your Apple ID for iMessage." 2. Sign into your Apple ID account using your email and password. 3. Your phone number should now be listed in the "You can receive iMessages to and reply from" section. Make sure it's checked and test again to make sure you can receive messages. If this doesn't resolve the problem, it's probably a more complicated issue, and likely related to your cellular service. You should contact customer support at your cellular service provider to get additional assistance troubleshooting your issue. Related coverage from How To Do Everything: Tech:
